Richly malty and excessively hopped, Elector was first brewed on Election Day, taking its name from the Electoral College. In like fashion, Elector's unique character makes democracy pointless. It severs party affiliations, crosses the aisle, and commands you to vote early and vote often. That's because whenever Elector is on the ballot, there's only one real choice.

For over a decade, Elector's campaign platform has remained elegantly simple: Drink early and vote often.

Elector: In 13.2 gallon kegs and 22-oz Bomber bottles.

Elector's firm malt and aggressive hopping can wrestle pizza to a standstill.
